Related Background Art When a manufacturing process of an automobile body, a manufacturing process of a home electric appliance, a manufacturing process of a building material, a manufacturing process of an industrial machine, or the like is established using fiber-reinforced resin molded products, a resin structure can be efficiently manufactured in a short period of time. A molded product formed with fiber-reinforced resin has a hardness comparable to a metallic material, and is superior in mechanical strength, rigidity, dimensional stability and the like to the molded product formed with foamed polyolefin resin or the like. Furthermore, the molded product formed with fiber-reinforced resin is lightweight and also excellent in weight saving. In particular, in the case of the resin structure, the weight of a wall material is reduced, and the weight of a roof material is reduced, thereby preventing an increase in the weight of the automobile body itself. By utilizing these merits, a method for manufacturing an automobile body using fiber-reinforced resin is being studied in recent years. However, in a process for manufacturing a molded product formed with fiber-reinforced resin, the resin removed in separation is discarded as waste. For this reason, the manufacturing
