While I was in Europe (Traveling to Fleece), I found this cute little pattern on Twitter and had to try it. From Timeless Treasures Crochet, (and a review of it as well), I took their pattern and made a modified version, which I thought went really well. I used mohair for the body. The black is mohair/wool, the red/purple is acrylic, with the gray inside the body being wool. It felt so good! I think it is a perfect warm weather sweater. It would be lovely with a tank and some ruffles. I just love how this turned out! Such a great pattern! What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0.1)?

Quentin Tarantino's Once Upon a Time... in Hollywood starred Tim Roth, Bruce Dern, and Leonardo DiCaprio as a screenwriter who falls for his leading lady, and his relationship with her is the heart of the film's dramatic arc. Tarantino has a very specific vision of his characters, and he's pretty direct about what they should and shouldn't say. Here are some of the quieter moments where DiCaprio's character drops some subtle hints to Margot Robbie's as to what he's thinking. This is a very Tarantino character. He's extremely direct, and will say exactly what he wants to in a scene, even if it makes no sense. And a lot of the commentary will make little sense. There's a lot of meta-commentary here, and Tarantino clearly likes the way the scene plays out in terms of the plot of the movie. So he basically helps the audience out with this dialogue, to let them into his head, in a way that he would never do on screen. He's doing a movie right now in which Leonardo DiCaprio is playing a screenwriter called Rick Dalton, who is making a movie based on his life. And so in this movie, Rick Dalton finds out about the big story at the end of the movie. Rick learns that his co-star had a very important part in the big movie, when she's about to be killed off. And so Rick goes into the emergency brain surgery that he needs to have in order to win the part. And as he's lying there, in his hospital bed, the big showdown between Rick and the other actor playing the other leading character is about to go down, and his wife is about to be killed. And as that happens, Rick manages to get into his brain and think to himself: That's the big scene! I have to know what happens! And so he rolls his eyes and starts frantically thinking of ways of getting the part. Or a lot of the stuff that they say when they're trying to be clever, as if the audience doesn't know what the big scene is. It's just sort of bizarre and fun and a little bit crazy. When Rick is on the operating table, you can see
