I'm refactoring a codebase that uses the ServerTag attribute to decorate Spring-managed beans. After the refactoring, I've removed the attributes from all the beans and marked them as @Transactional. I wonder what should be the correct approach in this situation. Is this a defect in the codebase? Is it a bad idea to remove it? What is the correct approach? A: The ServerTag attribute allows you to annotate Spring beans by introducing the concept of "server-only" beans, i.e. these are beans that are typically instantiated once per application lifetime (i.e. in an EJB environment). The main use case for this attribute in Spring is when you have a singleton bean that does not really need to be distributed to other clients (i.e. it is a "quasi-singleton"). That being said, removing the attribute is fully correct if you are planning to transition to another framework or you will run into compatibility problems. A: Since you assign rhs with rhs.assign, you need to make sure this is also correctly set so the compiler knows which object you're assigning to: foo& operator=(const foo& rhs) { rhs.assign(data); this->assign(rhs); // add this line return *this; } the world - one of the reasons we're here" - from Theodate Pope to her then husband and her son and grandson. We don't want "balance" we want justice and we're willing to stand up for what we've got and what we've lost if we have to. So if you believe in it keep doing what you're doing, but make sure the source of your information is good, documented and change happens.
