1. *With Photoshop still open from the last time you closed it, choose File → Close. The Close dialog box opens.
 2. Click the Close button to save any changes you've made.
 3. Click OK to return to the previous screen. The Close dialog box closes and Photoshop shuts down, as shown in Figure 5-10.
- FIGURE 5-10: Make changes to an image and save them. The next steps show you how to open and save an image. Keep in mind that a photo is just a collection of pixels. The larger an image, the more pixels it has. So if you need to resize an image and create a smaller version of it, don't simply downsize the original in the photo editor. Instead, copy the original to another file, edit the copy, and then paste it into the smaller version.

Photoshop. I will go through each part of the tutorial and explain what I'm doing. Watch this Photoshop tutorial on how to create a realistic water effect with Photoshop. Step 1: Preparation Open your image in Photoshop. Step 2: Add a gradient Add a gradient in the area where the water meets the background (or where the water will be) in the bottom of your image. Step 3: Make the water transparent Go to the Transparency panel in the Photoshop menu. Set the Opacity of your gradient to 0%. Step 4: Create and extract the water pattern Go to Filter -> Liquify and add a little Distortion. You will see a black layer called Vector Mask. It contains the water pattern. Click OK. Your water is now ready. To a681f4349e

This invention relates to fluid couplings and, in particular, to a coupling of the type comprising a pair of rotatable parts, one of which is formed of elastomeric material and the other of which is rigid. Fluid couplings of this type generally consist of a rotatable assembly formed of a pair of cups with a resilient O-ring having a multiplicity of semi-cylindrical projections or keys engaged by axially extending slots in the exterior wall of one cup. These keys in turn are engaged by slots within the outer wall of the other cup. Such a coupling is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 3,796,595.

Generally, the elastomeric member is mounted on the coupling by pressing it into the cup through the annular recesses which extend around the interior wall of the cup. The exterior peripheral edge of the elastomeric member is pulled through the slots in the sleeve to compress the keys in their mating slots. These elastomeric members have a disadvantage in that they are not readily fabricated. This is due to the fact that the fabrication of the keys, slots and annular recesses in the elastomeric member requires very close tolerances in order to insure that the keys fit properly in their slots. In some cases, the elastomeric member may be relatively easily made but this is true only if the projections on the keys are linear. This is the case in most machines which produce couplings by molding elastomeric members about the projections of an annular sleeve. In another case, the elastomeric member may be made by pressing the projections through a suitably shaped mold. In this case, however, the projections are shaped such that they require considerable force to insert them into the slots in the rigid member. In some cases, the elastomeric member is made separately and then pressed onto the coupling. This operation requires some care since the projections tend to deflect slightly in a radial direction from the center of the elastomeric member. As a consequence, unless the operator inserts the projections through the slots in the rigid member with extreme care, they may be misplaced to a sufficient extent as to cause leakage. It is a main object of the present invention to provide a fluid coupling of the character described which overcomes the problems and disadvantages mentioned above. Another object is to provide such a coupling in which the elastomeric member is made in a molding operation to assure the
