Recently, nonlinear ultrasonic imaging systems have attracted much interest, including those without linear transducer arrays. This work demonstrates an imaging system that utilizes the embedded bit-plane coding technique. A sinusoid burst is encoded into the coding bits to reduce the data rate of the sample function. The ultrasonic image is reconstructed from the compressed bits. It is shown that this novel imaging system improves the output quality of nonlinear medical imaging while retaining the key feature of low data rate. 'The Flash' Episode 4: 'Daddy-Long-Legs' Clip!
