The economy is still weak and if you are qualified to fill a position you will be let go from your current job. The kicker is even if you want to get a new job, you cannot fight your way in to the front of the line. Before we go to the hiring process, employers want to have a good idea of who they want to hire. A well prepared resume will help increase your chances of being selected. Here are seven ways to make your resume stand out. It is important to follow all the guidelines listed, but you should also be aware of how you can improve your resume to increase your chances of employment. 1. Personalize Your Resume A resume is not just a resume. Do you use a business card for your resume? It can be a cool picture with your name and phone number. Do you have an interesting hobby that could be placed on your resume? If you own a business, a picture of you is a good way to make your resume look professional. Your skills and accomplishments can be outlined on the first page in bullet format. Don't be afraid to use the first person because it gives your resume a more personable touch. 2. Create a Worthy Cover Letter This is where you tell them why they should pick you over the other applicants. Remember you are not just selling yourself, you are also networking. To get a second chance, you have to show the hiring manager why you should be their choice. One bad mistake can throw off the rest of your resume. A cover letter is supposed 570a42141b
