The treatment options for stage IIA low-grade endometrial carcinoma include hysterectomy, radiation, chemotherapy, and hormone therapy. There is no standard treatment for stage IIA high-grade endometrial carcinoma [|[@CR6], [@[CR7]]. I know it's not possible in a standard web browser to prevent a site from remembering login information, and there is a general preference against it by browser makers, but if it's possible to do it with something like Javascript, is it desirable to do so? The idea is to provide users with a quicker login experience, with the added benefit of reducing the chances of people re-entering a site and re-logging in because they've forgotten where they've entered in their username and password. A: This isn't an attempt to discourage you from attempting this kind of feature, just an indication of the potential pitfalls of doing so.
