Try specifying the type arguments explicitly. I would be happy to use a parameterless version of the function if that is the way to make the function generic. A: No, it is not possible. The generic type parameter must be the same in the method and in the call site, you cannot add a constraint in a method parameter definition. You can create a non-generic version that just gets the property from the instance if it exists, and throws an exception if it doesn't: var f = propertyInfo.GetValue(this, null) as T; if (f == null) { throw new InvalidOperationException("Property not found on the object"); } A: When creating an interface or method signature, it is limited to the set of arguments that are provided. Generic arguments must always be specified as part of the method or type definition, regardless of where they are used.
