Is there any way to tell it NOT to load them? The only thing I've been able to find is to add this to config/initializers/mkm.rb: Rails.application.eager_load! But this is kind of a pain to write and I'd rather have a "disable this for now" ability... A: Generally, you can find the full list of Rails autoloading at the very bottom of the config/application.rb. See: # Loads your application.autoload_paths. # This file is default in Rails 3 and it's usually empty, but you can # override it if you want your own custom paths. By default, rails will automatically load all the files in app/helpers, app/controllers, app/models, and app/views, and even an app/controllers/action_controller folder. World history of the Middle Ages, Fourteenth Century, Volume 8 - Page 933 Page 933 In England the monk and historian John Capgrave was again of great service to us, when he published his masterly History of England in three folio volumes, 1255-64. That he himself was the compiler of this work is nowhere asserted, but as the dates, 5, 6, and 11 December 1255, must be considered very doubtful, he seems clearly to have been responsible. The work is based partly on the chronicle of Matthew Paris, but, unfortunately for our purpose, Capgrave's remarks are only brief, and are chiefly on the ecclesiastical history. The very learned Benedictine order had indeed the best scholars in England at their command, and the most renowned among them were ca3bfb1094

What's New in the?

Add shapes to your drawings based on an import (video: 1:11 min.) Detect the position and size of imported shapes, and place them automatically in your drawing. (video: 0:36 min.) Find information on shapes such as their shape type, color, linetype, etc. (video: 0:39 min.) Access color models for the imported shapes by navigating to the object details page (video: 0:51 min.) Viewpoint line improvement: Exporting to paper reduces the size of drawings in some views. In those views, it is now easier to view multiple drawings and zoom in to specific views. You can now always go to the last view before you exported your drawings to paper by default (no matter where you are). The commands that show you how to restore the previous view state, are more accessible in the View menu. Zoom improvement: Now you can zoom in to a view by moving the mouse button to the left or right of the viewport. This makes it easier to quickly zoom in to the view you want. You can now undo a zoom. You can no longer zoom the view by pressing Alt while moving the mouse button. Time: A notification has been added in the corner of the drawing window. It shows you when you are close to the limit of the time you have available to complete the current task. Image support: You can now add images (BMP, JPG, PNG, and TIFF) to your drawings. New commands: You can now easily place the default and named copyright icons from the Insert menu. You can also insert a symbol for "Copyright". You can now add the Microsoft Office icons to your drawings. You can now export from AutoCAD as a PDF with a watermark. You can now add to drawings that are in embedded or offline storage. You can now add to drawings that are currently in insert. You can now open embedded AutoCAD files from within AutoCAD. You can now close an open AutoCAD window. You can now start a timer. You can now start the View Menu. You can now use the Zoom tool to rapidly zoom to
