The overall objectives of this research are to study the interaction of immunoglobulins with a variety of biological materials and their relationship to the specificity of the various antigen-antibody reactions and to the humoral immune response. Biochemical studies will continue on the structure and biosynthesis of IgM, IgA and IgG. The molecular basis for the regulation of production of immunoglobulins will be investigated. B-cell stimulation factors will be used to promote the maturation of immunocytes in vitro. Attempts will be made to determine whether the factor system is regulated by the products of antigen-specific cells and antibodies and which components are most active. Certain neurons are known to innervate the salivary gland and pancreas and anandamide has been found to be present in the saliva. We have demonstrated that anandamide levels increase in blood and tissue of mice following adrenalectomy. Thus, a humoral factor is released into blood in the absence of steroid hormones and this factor may in part be derived from nervous tissue. This finding is supported by the demonstration of anandamide in saliva of mice. The project is designed to study the mechanism of adren
