The Gradient tool is a handy way to add color to images. You can control how colors blend together to create natural looking gradients. The Dodge and Burn tools remove colors from parts of an image and change colors to white. The Smudge tool allows you to spread colors or use them to blur or soften an image. The Eraser tool allows you to remove pixels or colors from an image. First and foremost: Photoshop is not a picture editing tool. To use it for photography, you'll need to be comfortable with digital photography and image manipulation. Fortunately, the basic tools that can be used to alter the composition, color and tone of your images are very similar. Let's take a look at the most common Photoshop editing techniques for photography:

Vignette corrections Remember those days when you wanted to have a "black and white" effect on your picture? You could use the Color Sampler tool and change the highlights and shadows to black and white to create a vignette. The same is true with dark or lightening the photo, so you don't end up with a too dark or too bright picture.

Hue and Saturation Hue and Saturation is the most basic way to control the saturation or brightness of the photo. You can use the Hue/Saturation dialog box to adjust the overall color of your picture. The default settings are generally best to use, but you can change it to lighten or darken your photo if you want.

Color Curves The Curves tool allows you to make gradual changes to the colors in your picture and create a photo that has a more realistic look. The tool can be used to lighten a dark picture or make a dull picture lighter.

Luminosity The Luminosity tool allows you to adjust the luminosity, or brightness, of an image. You can use the tool to brighten a dark picture or darken a bright picture.

Contrast The Contrast tool is very similar to the curves tool. You can use it to make an image lighter or darker. In essence, the contrast tool can be used to tweak the brightness of an image just like the curves tool.

Soft Light/Hard Light The Soft Light and Hard Light tools adjust the lighting

Data from the U.S. Energy Information Administration and the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission reveal that for the first time in over two decades, the U.S. energy mix is approaching a "dual-fuel" balance of 48% nuclear power and 52% coal. In December of 2018, EIA reported that a combination of a slowdown in nuclear capacity additions and strong demand for electricity, particularly from the growing U.S. industrial sector, pushed the U.S. nuclear share of electricity generation to 48% for the first time since 1992. The NRC verified that the U.S. nuclear share of electricity generation crossed the threshold in the second half of 2018. The U.S. coal share declined substantially over that same time period. The EIA "Monthly Energy Review" shows that the growing demand for electricity drove electricity generation from fossil fuels to outpace non-fossil-fuel generation. The last time coal electricity generation surpassed non-fossil-fuel generation was in March of 2018. Nuclear power overtook natural gas as the second largest source of electric power. The U.S. Energy Information Administration has posted the graphic below, which also includes the EIA's on-site, published weekly data. Credit: EIA

The U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) maintains its on-site, published weekly "Weekly Energy Review" for the United States. The nuclear share of electricity generation in the U.S. is projected to grow to 52% in 2019, and 53% in 2020. Nuclear's share of electricity generation is expected to continue to edge upwards in subsequent years. However, at some point, the nuclear share of electricity generation will start to shrink because of slow capacity additions to the nuclear industry. The coal share of U.S. electricity generation is projected to decline significantly to 32% in 2019 and 27% in 2020. Following the slow growth in nuclear capacity additions, the coal share of electricity generation is expected to slowly decline, but the decline is expected to be relatively modest. The margin between the coal and nuclear shares of electricity generation is projected to decline to 5.8% in 2019 and 4.8% in 2020. Growth in nuclear power is expected to be the major contributor to the declining margin between the coal and nuclear share of electricity generation.
