Atlanta's Dade County Courthouse was evacuated Friday due to a "fireball" seen over the city, reports the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. A "ball of fire" was seen shooting into the sky at around 9:30 p.m. It was described as the "size of a watermelon" and was burning a hole in the sky before it broke up. The two-minute spectacle was seen over the city of Atlanta, but no other details on the source of the fire were made available. The evacuation was ordered by authorities, and was due to a "specific threat to public safety." No injuries were reported. The city of Atlanta has been the site of several fires this year. The Auburn Avenue Baptist Church was destroyed by a fire at the start of May, as were a number of vacant homes in the city after tornadoes in March, as well as an Atlanta church late last year.
