D'C. Selway S. Patefield B. et al. A randomized trial of three delay strategies in the emergency department. 2). To assess treatment outcome differences among the three treatment strategies. Patients had to have significant arm pain [the SAQ score was at least 6 points (1-10) higher than the GAQ score] and had to report pain in two or more peripheral sites (supraspinatus, biceps, triceps, forearm). Lillevoll F. Acute musculoskeletal pain: conservative and operative management. We compared the costs and outcomes of the MRI group with those of the IBIA group using propensity score matching. 60 patients received an MRI: 15 of these received surgery due to instability and were grouped with the MRI group in our analysis. 170 of the 396 patients received an IBIA procedure (45.3%). A second post-intervention assessment was performed after 6 weeks. We then compared the two groups after propensity score matching. The deltoid repair group was associated with a shorter duration of surgery (21.2 min vs 32.4 min) and lower costs (22,683 vs 33,215 DKK). We observed a lower return to work rate (19.7% vs 53.9%) and a higher SAQ pain score at 3 months (46.9 vs 26.3) and 6 months (49.5 vs 39.2). We believe that for the vast majority of patients with mild SAIS, MRI is not necessary in the emergency department. For those patients with grade III SAIS presenting to the Emergency Department, extended observation has been shown to be safe and effective in delaying surgical exploration, and we advocate a similar strategy for the minimal invasive approach. At an average followup of about 26 months, the rate of complete healing (including a return to preinjury level of function) was lower in the MRI group (47%) than in the IBIA group (71%). 23). We therefore compared the outcomes of patients who had undergone a MRI with those of the group of patients who had received an IBIA. This analysis revealed significantly higher pain levels in the MRI group. On patient satisfaction assessment, the IBIA group showed a higher proportion of satisfied patients (89.5 vs 77.0%). We observed similar results for functional outcomes, with higher scores in the IBIA group. These outcomes are probably related to the more aggressive nature of the treatment
