TORONTO Rather than the traditional faux eyelid, Denise Charles designed the Eyelid of Justice, a collection of eyes, eyebrows, and two nostrils, so women can choose their own look. “I wanted to give the ladies a choice,” she says, gesturing toward her creation. The volumized lips are not only pretty but practical, too — a good fit for the homeless and the jobless who rely on inexpensive food stores. For the unemployed, she notes that a haircut is the cheapest, easiest salon treatment they can manage, and perhaps a woman who’s out of work could opt for a wispy look. The eyes and nose, with their simultaneous round and oval shapes, are a nod to the differences women seem to have. “We all have different personalities and we all have different features,” says the designer. Besides, Charles doesn’t do things by halves. She has created Eyes Without Borders, a global design empire that exports to Russia, China, and Brazil. She has introduced the careers of 11 children as artwork for the Met’s “Diana and Her Companions” exhibition. She has designed hats, coats, accessories, handbags and even clothes for designer Tommy Hilfiger, the WNBA and the Academy of Country Music. “People are always going to be surprised,” says Charles, who’s also a senior instructor at the Fashion Institute of Technology and a two-time finalist in Fashion Week’s Stylishly You division. She is also an ardent supporter of “V” for Vulnerable, a national program started last year by the Make-A-Wish Foundation. As part of the program, Charles is sponsoring the first-ever Lady Liberty Tattoo for the construction of Liberty’s face, the centerpiece of Liberty Island in New York. “It’s fitting,” she says. “If we’re going to make America great, I think we have to get the men and women out of the world wars and start with our own family, start with love, and start with family.” In honor of the program, Charles has created several designs for international tattoo parlors. “I’m thrilled that I can help these kids,” she says. “It’
