For example, if you have an image that has faded or greenish edges in areas that you wish to remove, you can easily do so, provided that the original tonal range was adequate to begin with. * * *

Q: VLC falls back to mplayer, even if it is set as the preferred player I have installed VLC and configured it to be the preferred player for certain filetypes. I also have mplayer installed. Whenever I select a file and open it with VLC, mplayer is loaded with all its libraries (and can even be minimized). Even when I select an audio file type, there is a list of audio players with the usual options such as 'preferred audio player', 'always open' etc. Nevertheless, VLC is the only one I can select. How can I tell Ubuntu to always use VLC? A: If you have both VLC and Mplayer installed, you can set it by first uninstalling Mplayer, then right-click on a video file and choose 'Open with VLC', then right-click on that file and choose 'Open with Mplayer. If you don't want to unistall Mplayer, you can set it by right clicking on the file, then choose 'Open with…' from the list, then choose VLC. To configure VLC as the default video player, you have to change the settings in the multimedia section (Tools, Preferences, Default Player).
