Stick to the golden rule of action RPGs. Make "go," "fight," "jump" and "crouch" easily operational by pressing a single button. Aim for the center square to change weapon type. 2. A Game that Sticks to the Rules of THE BEGINNING, you never die during the main story. Ever. If you survive, you can go back in to search for the last chance. In addition, there are no wrong choices. But through various means, you can find hints that can help you search for the correct answers. 3. A Game that Explores the Many and the Little Things In the Lands Between, there are many things to discover. If you want, you can spend an entire day searching around for those things. However, don't underestimate the tiny things. Explore the little things on your way and you'll be surprised by the chance of something big and good appearing. 4. A Game that Has you Search a World for Missing Memories During your journey in the Lands Between, you won't just encounter monsters. You'll encounter other people who have similar situations like yourself. In addition, you can ask the people you meet to search for information that they think can help you. The people you meet will be a part of your party. 5. A Game that Has you Create a World of YOUR Imagination There are many times when we want to be alone. Play alone for a while without worrying about anything. In the BEGINNING, there are many people who wish for that as well. That's why you can create your own world in which you can enjoy yourself with your friends and enemies. Brrr... When I started reading this, it got me thinking of all the story worlds that I've read off which are definitely not fit for winter!

A bleak gray forest with a bitter chill

tl;dr - I enjoyed the author's first story so much that I'd love to see a part 2.

This story was written a while ago, so a bit rough around the edges... I really need to fix the formatting before I commit it to a public domain posting, so I'm tempted to drop it back in the cunctus sub-reddit, but maybe here'll suffice.

"Princess Tela'knir and her elven companion, Ba'den, were nearly ready to depart the Elven Stronghold of Cunctus for the sparkling blue waters of the Ice Lake beyond. The sun shone bright and warm, the bright green grass of the lush surrounding forest was dotted with colorful flowers, making Cunctus—the land between the Ice Lake and the swel
