Of particular interest was the timing of the release of the new MLS expansion teams, which is coming just a few days before the new format is set in motion. Here's what we covered: On the USL season: -2017 USLSoccer.com Media Guide -The East Coast was for the taking in the 2017 USL regular season. There was simply no way one of those two clubs could be left out of the playoffs. If we look at the results as broken down by conference, USL competition was clearly the best over the course of the last month. USLSoccer.com would like to remind our readers that regular season match coverage will be on hiatus during the playoffs and the MLS portion of the schedule commences with the Minnesota-San Jose match on Wednesday. -USL attendances both in the Conference Finals and US Open Cup saw their best ever totals. The Eastern Conference Championship resulted in the second highest ever attendances for the conference finals and playoff attendance hit a 16-year high.

Step 4.Install and StartIt, after it is installed and Start it. Download it : VB.NET display time in Chinese (Taiwan) I am converting a time from milliseconds to the user's timezone, so my code is the following: Dim loc As String System.Globalization.CultureInfo.CurrentCulture = New System.Globalization.CultureInfo("zh-TW") loc = System.Globalization.CultureInfo.CurrentCulture.DateTimeFormat.ShortTimePattern Me.txtTime.Text = Convert.ToDateTime(DateTime.Now).ToString("hh:mm tt", New System.Globalization.CultureInfo("zh-TW")) Everything works fine, except that the output time is displayed as Chinese: Sun Feb 10 12:29:38 2016 How to force the output to be in the native local language (Taiwanese)? I've tried setting the display to use the TimeZoneInfo.Local.DisplayName, also using the lblTime.Text = and yet I get the same output. I've also checked the Result property of txtTime, and it returns the correct time to the format. A: Your problem is a misunderstanding of the ways of setting culture. An approach that relies on changing the Display name of the UI element is cumbersome and buggy. Use the DateTime formats as designed, not the display formats. The only way is to change the DateTime to CultureInfo, then use the DateTime to set the UI culture to the native one. Dim locale As CultureInfo = New CultureInfo(cultureInfoString)
