A: From the documentation of the Formatter: The Formatter object accepts a formatter_class which is a Python callable, but it does not require an instance. In your function setup(), you're passing the lambda_function a Function object which is already frozen: self.fields['city_id'].formatter = lambda x: GObject.format_size(x[0], self.context) So when you call formatter_func the argument passed is the formatter_class mentioned above. I am not sure what your goal is but if you want to pass a function to the Formatter object, don't use the argument as a Function, use a reference to the function itself: self.fields['city_id'].formatter = lambda x: GObject.format_size(x[0], self.context) # use the reference to the function rather than the argument self.fields['city_id'].formatter_func = self.fields['city_id'].formatter Semiconductor chips such as memory chips are usually provided with fuses. The fuses can be programmed so that they are either open circuits or closed circuits. This programming is typically done by blowing them (by heating them) so that a portion of the fuse material becomes damaged. This causes the fuse to either open or close depending on the material of the fuse. These fuses can be used to store information or programming. When a read operation is performed, a small amount of current is used to open a selected fuse. A comparator is used to determine whether the current is above a reference value. If so, the value of the capacitor that is connected in series to the fuse is read. In an embedded DRAM (eDRAM) device, 0cc13bf012
