"Russia now has a $99 billion debt, which is growing by 2.2% per year," he said. According to him, the decline in the country's current account is the main reason behind the debt growth. "Our debt is mostly registered in short-term credits. Russian current account revenues in the fourth quarter grew by 3.4%, while the country's debt service expenses increased by only 2.2%. This is a negative balance equal to $500 million," he said. According to Makarov, Russia's debt continues to grow due to large annual expenditures related to military modernization and rising energy prices, which are assumed to continue. "The total debt of Russian companies grew by 3.5% in the first nine months of 2016, to $23.2 trillion. The main debtors are state and municipal authorities, their subsidiaries and pension funds," he said. Last year, 6d1f23a050
