Basically, this browser add-on shows you all the websites you bookmarked in the past and place them within reach. You can choose which of the bookmark folders should be in focus, and which should be displayed as a docked directory. You can also paste the thumbnail URL for each bookmarks, change their titles or quickly search for a certain entry. If you want to automate the process of assigning icons to each URL, you can grant some additional permissions to the extension - yet, users who value their privacy will probably refrain from doing this and just select the icons manually. You can also tamper with the maximum grid width, the tile size or the number of gaps. The text and background colors can be adjusted using the integrated palette or by manually entering the respective color codes, whereas the labels can be hidden with a single mouse click. Additionally, you can change the animation speed or set the links to open in a separate tab. You get the possibility to export the current configuration to a JSON file that you can later import in a different browser. All in all, Perfect Home can help you improve the productivity of your work by ensuring your preferred websites are always at hand. No expert skills are required, not even if you want to customize the look of the extension.
