You can download the application from below: Please be responsible for your own actions. of this study is that our sample was not a random sample of the entire population of women at the facilities, but all women who gave birth in the two study facilities at the time of the study. This is a limitation of the study design, and it is possible that the views of women who gave birth in other facilities are different. We made a decision not to include women who had given birth before 2013, because it was too difficult to match this data with the 2013 data and because this could have introduced selection bias. Conclusion { #S0005} ===== This study found that after birth, a third of women in Zimbabwe felt it was acceptable to be assisted by a male in the birthing room and the majority were not aware of or in favour of the midwife-assisted birth practice. By contrast, the majority of women knew that a man can help during normal delivery. Women felt that the overall influence of ANC on birth preparedness and decision-making was helpful and they were aware of the roles they should play in pregnancy, birth and post-partum care. Women would appreciate home visits by community volunteers and access to private transport.
