Hirschman grew up in New York City and performed in underground venues in the 1980s before moving to Los Angeles. Early life Hirschman was born and raised in Jamaica, Queens, New York City. Career Hirschman began performing at the age of ten at such venues as the Hollywood Arches, a club/theater on Washington Street in Manhattan that was home to many young West Village artists. After being accepted into a private acting school in his teens, Hirschman later worked as a nanny, a teenage exchange student, and as a doorman before deciding to become a professional comedian. Hirschman studied Theater at Washington Square College in New York. Hirschman's first big break came after being a contestant on the first season of Late Night with Conan O'Brien. Hirschman was one of seven comics featured on the show's first episode with Dave Chappelle. He has appeared on the Comedy Central show Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn, and on the Late Night with Conan O'Brien spin-off Crank Yankers. Hirschman was a co-star in the 1996 comedy film The People vs. Larry Flynt. In the film, he portrayed Lennie, a friend of porn star Vanna White, who turns up at White's party at her house and is shocked when she reveals that she is a stripper; he also starred in an episode of Bakersfield P.D. named after him and played the character Jeff Rossi. From 1997 to 2000, Hirschman played W.W. Richter, the live-in boyfriend of Andy Richter's alter-ego Pete Carlson on the show That '70s Show. He appeared in the 1998 sitcom NewsRadio as the best friend of David Spade's character. Hirschman played Bongo Newkirk in Clueless. He also made appearances on SNL, The Nanny, Spin City and My Name Is Earl. In 2004, Hirschman played the character of Chaim (or Chaimie
