The story of 4 intertwined tales. The Universe of Oriens, Nychthemerom, Mensara and Peristal. In a time when the ancient nations waged war, a girl on the run must find a way to stop the evil plans of the dark god, Crome. Swarmed with bounty hunters and bent on revenge, she has only one thing on her mind... to escape. The Story of 4 is an ambient experience in which you are immersed and have to decide your own fate. Here's a quick preview - Altademia. Welcome to the realm of wondrous and mysterious, with an enchanting setting. A land of friendly people and sadistic misfit villains. For those of us who are old enough to remember it, this setting seems like a lost time in gaming, with plenty of adventure, immersing and mystery, plus the nostalgic connotations of Dr. Mario. The premise of the game is that the player does not choose a class, but rather gets to choose an "ancient power" out of a list of 3, one for each of the three realms of Altademia. Each realm has a different set of powers, but the player can choose from them. The game has a 2D perspective, with most of the gameplay on top of a grid. In addition to combat and exploration, the player will be spending a lot of time in dungeons and towns. Gameplay is quite simple, but time-consuming, so it won't last long at all if you don't like to play long-playing RPGs. For a taste of the game, the first few levels are intended to give a basic feel of the gameplay. If you like any of the original games, you will probably enjoy this title. It's a very enjoyable game, and if you like any of the main series, you should play. What's new:

A cubstacle is a framing device for motorcycles that makes them appear to have two wheels in order to comply with traffic regulations that prohibit using motorcycle headlights. The rules requiring bike lights only apply where a bike is going to be ridden at night. Indeed, there are many rides in the daylight hours in Europe where the required lights are not switched on at all, and many in the US that do not use their lights at all unless otherwise disallowed. Streetlights, stop signs, crosswalks, road signs, motorists' perceptions of speed, signs of "Vertically Restricted Highways," and all of the other signals that protect road users usually are far more noticeable and are more constant sources of light, compared to the intermittent flashing light (flashing every 10 or 20 seconds) given to motorcycles. The technique was originally used to lower production costs by using a motorcycle part with two wheels on the back to make a part that required only one. It has been used for decades and, before the rise of the small internal combustion engine, it was more efficient than purchasing a fully equipped motorcycle. Modern motorcycles use CBUs (Cubic Inch Units) in their construction, so there is a lot of plastic and metal in a single motorcycle. The Cubstacle was superceded in some countries. Australia repealed its regulation in 1956 (and shortly afterwards led other nations to repeal theirs), New Zealand did away with its regulation in 2016, and the United States repealed a rule requiring flip-up headlamps. It is still used in some countries, including many countries within Europe and in Italy, the United Kingdom and some countries in North America. In the United States, sections of California, Maryland, and Virginia regulate the Cubstacle. In the UK it is now illegal to drive a vehicle that does not have three lights: day, low beam, and high beam. Industrial use While mostly applied to motor vehicles, the term is also used in the business world. See the link below to an example. Motorcycle design The Cubstacle technique was also applied for many years in the motorcycling world to design a new motorcycle frame, often with the idea of replacing the unpopular item such as the padded seat, overly-styled handlebars, padded tank, etc. With Cubstacle, designers used two wheels and a rear fender, then covered the body inside with a thicker piece of sheet metal. The wheelbase was raised and the motorcycle could be sl
