The Whirlpool Mixer turns the ice on, with the high level of Ice Cooler Produced by mixing dry ice with liquid ice. This ice is very small and light and can be left sitting on shelves above the normal ice. It is very practical, both from a hygienic point of view and for reducing the ice making in the freezer. It also provides a protective skin around the ice making zone and surface. This is a very useful feature for the dry ice associated with the ice machine, to prevent the surface of the ice from breaking off. Unzip it to your desktop.ers are split evenly between a second genetic tip based on Mendelian inheritance (for individualised analysis where the risk of a tumour suppressor gene mutation is greatest) and a third, or 'recombined', tip based on analysis of array-CGH profiles to improve risk stratification (where a higher risk of *TP53* mutation exists) [[@CR27]]. This latter has been shown to provide significant potential for non-invasive prenatal testing (NIPT) and allows for the detection of copy number changes in regions of a genome other than the *TP53* gene, providing complementary information. Studies have shown that about half of all fetal tumours have a maternal pathogenic *TP53* variant [[@CR28]], making *TP53* mutations the third most common disease-causing mutation in fetal tumours, after chromosome 7 copy number changes and *TERT* promoter mutations [[@CR29]]. Prioritisation of *TP53* screening should incorporate other identifiable tumour syndromes in order to optimise both care and cost, while it is important to highlight the need to detect all germline *TP53* mutations, including those in the non-truncal regions and to improve further the method of screening to ensure that testing in routine practice enables the identification of variants that have no clinical significance [[@CR27]]. How to manage patients with brainstem astrocytomas? {#Sec3} ===== The establishment of the previously mentioned classification system has necessitated a new approach to the prenatal management of patients with gliomas. Where patients can be predicted to have either favourable or unfavourable prognosis based on clinical findings and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) results, an individualised approach to patient management, starting with decisions about whether to amniocentesis or chorionic villi sampling (CVS), and terminating at surgical delivery, is most appropriate (Fig. 2). In practice, there are practical constraints on implementation of this approach, especially for mutations of *TP53* because they are rare, precluding expected benefits
