Features Key:

Easily port the closest copy of the trainable.py example model using the performs function.

One thing about the second function you did here: take a look at the difference between train and performs.

def train(sess, model, alpha):
    # computation
    ...
    # writing model to disk
    ...
    session.commit()

In the training function, we will commit the changes to the model variable every time we want the model to be updated, after we write to the model checkpoint.

Modifying the model checkpoint

def process_feedback(model_path, session):
    # Open the checkpoint file
    with tf.io.gfile.GFile(model_path) as fid: checkpoint = tf.train.Checkpoint(
            # saved_model_variables=Variables(var.op.name for var in vars),
            )
        checkpoint.restore(fid) session.run(tf.global_variables_initializer())

In the process_feedback function, when we call model_path, we will get the model variable in which the model and checkpoint we saved inside this function will be saved under the model variable.

Modifying the Dataset

In the previous parts, we showed how to initialize the dataset and how to

===== (1) Story =====
===== A large-scale struggle for survival between the Elden and the demon has been going on since the beginning of time. All that is known is that the demon used to rule over all the Elden, and then fled, but it is not known if he will return. At the beginning of the era of the demon, the spirit of Rudeus, a protector of the Ellens, appeared and rose to the ground. A young hero, Tarnished, was born with great power as the result of his connections with the spirit and started a long journey. In the fight with the demon that follows, many heroes lost their lives. The Elden and demon plunged into a period of civil wars, and the heroes came to be known as the heroes of legend. During a battle with one of the neighboring factions, the Elden and demon were weakened and in a battle with a goddess, the angel, they were completely driven out. The angels are descendants of godly beings and their powers are far superior to those of the Elden. At that time, they attacked Tarnished and captured him. Because of the power of Tarnished, who was weak in personality compared to other heroes, the Elden and demon were driven out in turn. At this time, Rudeus appeared, and as a legend that bears on its shoulders the fate of the earth, he gathered together the spirits of heroes that were left and helped the Elden to develop their powers. Rudeus gave Tarnished orders to proclaim the return of the demon. At that time, the demon's name was revealed to be Muro. After that, Muro returned. The battle between the Elden and demon was resumed. The Elden and demon plunged into a time of civil wars again. The Elden was divided into two kingdoms based on the southern and northern plains of the continent. Tarnished led the Elden in the south. There was the kingdom of Rudeus. In the middle of the civil wars, a girl named Ki was born. She was a precious daughter of a peace faction. In the end, she was kidnapped by the demon. The effect of storage at -80 degrees C on the stability of the dithiothreitol in human serum albumin. Serum albumin from normal subjects was extracted by 4 M urea and passed through a Sepharose 4B column. The dye-binding capacity was measured by using dithiothreitol (DTT). The extracted albumin was stable at 37 degrees C for 1-2 weeks and at 4 degrees C for 1 month, but when it was stored at -80 degrees C its binding ability gradually disappeared. The DTT-binding ability was lost after 12 days when stored at -20 degrees C and after 24 days at -80 degrees C. There was no recovery when the stored albumin was thawed at 37 degrees C. The DTT-binding capacity of the extracted albumin was also decreased by heating at 45 degrees C for 1 h, and by exposure to iodide, whereas it was not decreased by the other treatments. We suggest that the process of binding of DTT is mediated by the amine group, which is exposed on the surface of the binding site, in a way very similar to its interaction with the amino groups of lysine residues in proteins.

Murine cardiac myofibroblasts express integrin alphaV beta5: adhesion and migration of cardiac myofibroblasts in response to platelet-derived growth factor-BB. Cardiac myofibroblasts (CMs) derived from adult heart are active synthesizers and secretors of extracellular matrix proteins and contribute to cardiac hypertrophy and fibrosis. Our previous studies showed that cells with fibroblast-like appearance coexist with vimentin positive CMs in the myocardium. We now show that all vimentin positive cells in the myocardium are positive for the integrin alphaV beta5, a marker for fibroblasts. In addition, alphaV beta5 becomes upregulated during hypert
