Note and the source directory are retained in the installation. This allows you to change the directory to a different one after initialization without affecting running state. See also the -d (Destination) option in the Modify section. Note: The fireNote file is overwritten on all platforms if it is present in the root directory. To move the fireNote and source directories, use the -s (Source) and -d (Destination) options in the Modify section instead of the mkdir and rmdir commands. When modifying the file, you need to prepend the object name to each command. Now the commands can be written directly into the file. For example, if the compile command is in the fireNote file: modify /fireNote/compile.set.txt "path of file to modify" and the file is in the source directory: /path/to/src/fireNote/compile.set.txt it is referenced without prepending the path of the object name str: compile -d /path/to/destination -s /path/to/src -D PATH_TO_DEST_FLAG /path/to/destination So if the PATH_TO_DEST_FLAG was defined as above, then it would add the directories /path/to/destination to that path. */ #ifndef SYS_CMDSTR_H #define SYS_CMDSTR_H #if defined(UPPER_CASE) #define CMDSTR_T cmdsetStr #else #define CMDSTR_T cmdSetStr #endif int CMDSTR_T_init(); void CMDSTR_T_initFree(); int CMDSTR_T_addCache(); int CMDSTR_T_addDevice(); int CMDSTR_T_addObject(const char *objectName, const char *sourceFile, const char *funcName,
