As an enhancement, the ball physics are enhanced to more closely match the ball movements and behavior seen in the real-life. As an example of how this technology works, every movement a player performs results in a unique set of physical cues that are then translated to the ball's movement, which in turn changes the ball's physical properties in an authentic way. We are providing the developer, tools and art assets to use this technology and provide players with a more accurate and dynamic gameplay experience. After running through a season-opening win over the Blazers, the Rockets hit a state of hurt they're still dealing with. Houston lost nine straight games, including five straight losses to the Magic, and on Monday, that streak, which saw them get beat down by the number one team in the Eastern Conference (and one of the better ones in the conference) began to come to an end. The Rockets outpointed the Magic 129-113 and took the lead early, but a Mona Petrova three-pointer at the buzzer salvaged a 97-94 loss for the Magic. The loss ends an eight-game losing streak for Orlando, and was the first for the Rockets this season. The loss was a tough one for Houston, which has a shot at the No. 1 overall pick in the NBA Draft. With nine games remaining in the regular season, and five of those games on the road, they'll have to hit their stride if they hope to end their season with a winning record. After the game, Rockets guard James Harden could only make a quick comment on the loss before he was whisked off by reporters. Stay tuned to Bleacher Report for everything Rockets basketball this season.
