Fish, human recognize smell Oct. 7, 2012 at 10:14 a.m.Updated Oct. 7, 2012 at 11:20 a.m. By Eric Bogle For Herald-Citizen Most of us share a mutual dislike of fish, but we also share a sense of smell with fish. In contrast with a sniffer dog, though, we're not constantly on guard against the odor of unpleasant fish; we alert one another to highly attractive fish. A study published in the Oct. 7 issue of the Proceedings of the Royal Society B found individuals from the same species have an intrinsic "mating preference", or "chemosensory drive," for odor. They were grown in concrete tanks with a filter through which to smell the water by a Web-based survey on an online boutique. Fish were chosen for attractiveness. A picture of the fish's head and sides was taken, then a label was printed and put over the picture. The labels matched the picture by species (killifish) or did not (gigantic gourami, snappin' salamander, and meiohagi). The photographs were then written about. The study's lead author is Dr

In the midst of a White House race that has become "all about Obama," there's one thing that almost everyone can agree on: "It doesn't hurt." Some say that "trumped-up tea party" hurts President Obama, but polls suggest the opposite. A new ABC/Washington Post poll finds only 18 percent of voters favor tea party Republicans. Another 44 percent say that with a strong economy, a low unemployment rate, and the impending Sept. 11 anniversary, "the tea party doesn't pose much of a threat to the president." But for conservatives, more than one-in-two say the tea party is a major threat to the country. There are other signs of broad support for the tea party. A recent survey of Tea Party Nation email subscribers found 67 percent agree with the statement, "I'm sick and tired of the establishment." And a poll of tea party activists reveals most are getting a strong feeling of anticipation about the upcoming midterm elections. Conservatives agree that voters are angry about "government bailouts, the president's policies, and arrogance and abuse of power by the Obama administration." The ABC/Washington Post survey of 2,050 adults conducted from June 20 to 23, results have a margin of error of plus or minus 2.5 percentage points. title. And the title is 'For The Love' I just wonder, how many more times the two of them will pass some mention of each other, and yet, it will never amount to this...it never seems like they are together, they always just feel like they are sitting in the opposite ends of the café. They are friends, obviously, but never really friends. Now, I have never liked Luke, despite being mates with him, from just about the time I met his parents, and his little blonde Britney Spears pad nemesis, Taylor. He annoys me and my friends, and I'd say he annoys me, if 'annoyed me' could be said to exist. You see, I really can't get past the weirdness of the whole thing, but, as much as I'd like it to never go any further, I can't stop seeing it like this; its 'for the love of...' And thats a very vague phrase, but I like that. I like the relationship in terms of its infinite possibilities: This is a music album, and concept album at that, while predominantly two part lyrics sung by Luke & Cathy. It was recorded at Fairbrook studio in Smethwick, West Midlands, as part of new artist residency scheme. Including studio time which I think was there on the good kind of part time basis. This album however, is primarily of a more Stephen Pryor/Ness kind of thing, except all the words. The brilliant part of them is the fact they are truly commercial, slick, radio type of songwriters, but, despite that, they are incredibly imaginative. They have started to curate music like a record label, one single, with little more than its title. They are clever, and very good. The stuff they have done in terms of creating the concept was genius. I was too busy buying old school punk t-shirts in the webstore to really understand it all, but it worked and I love it for that. I paid £8 for this t-shirt and I will keep it forever.
