The last GoT ending was emotional, says Peter Dinklage From the National Cathedral: The ensemble of Game of Thrones viewers are willing to go to "any length" to maintain their loyalty to their current characters, Davos Seaworth told the congregation at the Cathedral of Saint Matthew the Apostle in Washington, DC, on Sunday. "We have come to any length to find the truth of what we are. In the confusion of what is right and wrong and the cry of what is true and what is false, we have sought the truth of who we are, what we are as human beings," he said at the service, which marked the beginning of the bishops' annual United States visit.

The image goes to a separate page, and the link goes to the original page. The following code does it, except when I click the link, nothing happens. An example of the html on the image page is: And the html on the target page: The problem I have is that I would like the link to be on the same page as the image, so I can give an image description as well. A: When I see a code that is like the example you posted I don't think you can do that with plain HTML and JavaScript because the target would have to be the img or the a but not the entire page. What you could do however is make an image that is the absolute URL of the page you want to go to. Then it could be the target of the link. page.php If you really want to do this the way you did it you can change it so that the link is the href of the image. Imports and then calls Imports and then calls Your target is the path to the page you want to call.
