Effect of TNF-alpha on gallbladder function during acute pancreatitis. Pancreatitis and cholecystitis are common complications of acute pancreatitis (AP). Intravenous infusion of tumor necrosis factor alpha (TNF-alpha) alters gastric and intestinal function, in addition to stimulating neutrophil synthesis and secretion of inflammatory mediators. The purpose of this study was to explore the hypothesis that TNF-alpha contributes to the pathogenesis of AP. A total of 15 rats were randomly assigned to three experimental groups. Group 1 rats were given an intragastric injection of TNF-alpha and then were killed after 24 hours. Group 2 rats received the same dose of TNF-alpha and were killed 4 days later. Group 3 rats were given an intragastric injection of normal saline and were killed 24 hours later. In the TNF-alpha group, there was significant edema, a discrete periductal inflammatory infiltrate, and acinar vacuolation in the pancreas. In the second and fourth days, no significant differences were observed in the pancreatic histological features of the second and fourth days. In the first day, the TNF-alpha group had a significantly greater acinar cell loss in the pancreata than did the other two groups (p in the EEOC complaint is nearly identical to the second lawsuit. Both lawsuits allege discrimination in terms of race and age, seek only monetary damages, and both assert the same six claims. The first lawsuit was filed within 180 days of Waller's filing of the complaint, but the second complaint was not filed until more than one year after the filing of the complaint. Waller argues that the tolling provision should apply because there was a continuance of the first lawsuit and no other attorney substituted for Waller.
