Quantum computers promise to solve certain problems, such as factoring large integers, that are believed to be intractable using classical computers. In the quest to develop quantum computers, it is imperative to develop useful quantum computer interfaces. A key advantage of a hybrid electrode model, which is comprised of metal and organic conducting materials, is that the electronic structure of the electrode can be tailored to use both covalent and ionic bonding, thereby presenting an electron-coupling environment appropriate for both ground and excited states of the molecules attached to it. Using this approach, a Ti/Ru-C(5)H(5) electrode, which contains both Ti(3+) (hybrid state) and Ru(3+) (atomic state), was used to reduce benzyl alcohol and resulted in increased steady state current and improved electron-transfer kinetics. Both the hybrid state and the singlet biradical ground state of benzyl alcohol were observed at the hybrid electrode. Similar results were obtained when the neutral molecule, benzaldehyde, was examined.Public Health Agency of Canada The Public Health Agency of Canada (PHAC) is a government agency that is responsible for public health and medical research in Canada and providing advisory and collaborative services to the Government of Canada.
