[Chris Ganter] Suitable for college use, this title opens with an exploration of graffiti's & Christoph Ganter Christoph Ganter is a German artist living in Berlin. He is a self-taught graffiti artist, taking his knowledge and obsession from street artists, at which point he began to do paint-graffiti in a more artistic way. Nowadays, he combines traditional graffiti, painting and drawing techniques with others in his work, from street art, writing, drawing and photography, telling stories and telling others & His work was shown in New York, London, Berlin, Paris, Los Angeles, Milan, São Paulo and Tokyo, as well as publishing galleries like Gema, Arte y Cultura Puebla and Artbunker. His work is included in public collections in Berlin, Essen, San Diego, Copenhagen and Los Angeles, mainly as temporary public art, and has been featured in prestigious magazines such as & His style has been recognized and has attracted the attention of the media. In 2005, & & published a feature interview & & about his work, where he has been interviewed by several art critics. His interest with traditional technique began with his love of drawing, which has developed into storytelling in his work. He likes to tell stories, referring to them as daydreams, which describes the way he creates images in a fitful or daydreaming state. As to the division in his work in terms of two different styles, he considers them as complementary, and does not divide them or himself in two different ways of creating works, just different. Christoph Ganter's work is influenced by the greats: Bill Simpson, JR, Banksy, Jean Michel Basquiat, Kenny Scharf, Futura, Rhys G and many more. Ganter's goal is to combine his love of the street art and graffiti with his roots
