supersu is an app that makes superuser more secure than the su binary. this is achieved by preemptively monitoring superuser for su:root_pw. if it is detected, it checks the version of supersu to ensure that it is signed by the signature of the most current release. if the check is successful, it sets the su:root_pw for the app to the new version and relaunches it. xposed framework is an amazing android app framework that enhances the performance and user interface of your device. it is a framework to extend the capabilities of any android phone or tablet device. this framework allows you to hide and/or show any part of your device according to your requirement. it also injects some effects into the device. download the latest.apk of gapps from here and save it to your sd card. reboot your device then unlock it and verify the original package with the one you downloaded.then head over to adb and push the.apk to your device. make sure to backup the backup your current google apps installation to the same path so that it can be restored easily when you finish flashing. if you don't do this, you'll lose all of your current data. reboot the device then enjoy your google apps. to install gapps for android 5.1.1 lollipop and build, you'll need to mount the system partition. in twrp menu, go to "advanced" and tap "verify system". choose "apex 1 rom" as your twrp version, then tap "install". reboot to load the new rom. to flash or update your gapps, you'll need to mount the system partition first. from twrp menu, you have several options including "wipe data/factory reset" or "wipe cache" and "recovery" option. we'll be using "system recovery" which is also the default recovery. you'll be prompted to choose an option then press "start system recovery" button. you'll then be presented with the system recovery. now select "mount /system" and then start updating.
