The words "or the court" mean just what they say, that the court which has the custody of the child, its welfare and that of the parent, has the power to hear and determine the motion to terminate visitation, and it cannot be delegated to the party who has custody of the child. Furthermore, the subject matter of the motion is visitation with the child of the father. The motion was filed during the period of visitation which had already been set by the court of competent jurisdiction over the parties and child in another case. This court has held that the action of a court of competent jurisdiction in hearing and determining the motion is not subject to collateral attack; and that the rights of the parties cannot be disturbed by the unauthorized act of the court hearing and deciding the motion. Colburn v. Colburn, Ky., 376 S.W.2d 203; Schieffler v. Schieffler, Ky., 364 S.W.2d 801. In the absence of evidence that the notice of appeal was mailed to the clerk of the court and the trial court clerk received and filed the notice within the sixty-day period provided in KRS 25A.050 and 25A.090(4), the order of the trial court overruling the motion to terminate visitation and to award expenses was made twenty-five days after the notice of appeal was filed. This appeal is dismissed for failure to appeal within the statutory period of sixty days, and the decision of the trial court is affirmed. Q: How do I view the output of my SOAP requests?
