I'm not sure if what I'm trying to do is the best way of doing it so I appreciate any suggestions. The way I'm trying to do it now is like this:

export const getUser = () => { const [one, two, three, four, five] = [ { user: "account" }, { user: "account" }, { user: "account" }, { user: "account" }, ]; return one || two || three || four || five; }; export const test = () => { console.log(getUser()); console.log(getUser()); console.log(getUser()); };

 I want to get the first object. If there's no object in the array then it should return a default one object. I tried doing this:

return [one || two || three || four || five].find(x => x.user === 'account')

 but it was returning more than one object. Maybe I can do this with a reduce function or something but I'm not sure how. A: You can do something like this

export const getUser = () => { return one || two || three || four || five; }; const one = { user: "account" }; const two = { user: "account" }; const three = { user: "account" }; const four = { user: "account" }; const five = { user: "account" }; console.log(getUser());

console.log(getUser()); console.log(getUser()); Distinct effects of protein-conjugated nanoparticles on the survival of normal versus cancer cells 04aeff104c
