The Australian Open, held annually at Melbourne Park, has been played since 1968 (until 1969, it was also known as the Australian Championships). The tournament is often nicknamed "The Australian" or "The Open" and in 2009 the website of Tennis Australia listed the official name of the tournament as being the Australian Open. The 2014 Australian Open was the first Australian Open to be held in Melbourne since 1985. The tournament was first played at the new Melbourne Park in 1988. Since the inauguration of the Australian Open, all Grand Slam tournaments have been played in January or February. The first tournament was played from January through March 1968, but was delayed by the first World Cup, played that year from May 6 through August 12. The tournament returned to Melbourne in 1988 and has been played there continuously except for a four-year hiatus between 1992-1996. The tournament is the largest tennis tournament played outside of the United States, and the largest tennis tournament in Australia. The Australian Open traditionally draws media and sporting interest from around the world, and is the most followed men's tennis tournament on both the ATP and WTA tours. In 2014, it is held between January 15 and February 6, and is expected to attract a record crowd of over 3.25 million spectators. The men's singles final was the most watched programme on Australian television that week with an average audience of 2,451,266. It is the fourth most watched programme on free-to-air Australian television with an average audience of 717,000, and was the most watched programme on subscription television, with 544,000 viewers. The tournament winner receives a golden trophy from the Montecristo cigar company. The first player to win three Australian Open singles titles was Rod Laver who achieved this feat in 1969 79a2804d6b
