In the past, water spray for washing out weeds, moss, algae, dirt and other debris from living surfaces, such as asphalt, concrete, dirt, lawns, gardens, or other surfaces that are in need of cleaning, has been done using a hose and a nozzle or other nozzle that is directly connected to the water source. The nozzle is manually propelled through the surface to be cleaned. More recently, electrically driven pressure washers that are powered by household current have been developed. The pressure of the spray generated by such pressure washers can be as high as 30,000 Pascals or more. The high pressure of the spray permits the effective cleaning of hard to reach surfaces, such as the interior of a roof. However, most electrically powered pressure washers, and most conventional hoses, are not suitable for cleaning hard to reach surfaces. Furthermore, it is often necessary to rotate the electrically driven pressure washer about the surface to be cleaned, in order to more effectively clean the surface. Although conventional hoses permit some turning of the nozzle, they are not capable of generating a spray having the same desirable characteristics as that generated by pressure washers. Further, it is often necessary to move a pressure washer from one location to another, as, for example, from a first location, such as a roof, to a second location, such as a ground surface. For example, if an owner or care-giver has a roof and a ground surface that needs to be cleaned, the roof owner can not reach the ground surface with a conventional pressure washer. In such situations, it is generally necessary to back the pressure washer up to the ground surface, in order to clean the ground surface. Also, if the ground surface to be cleaned is wet, it is often necessary to drain water from the ground surface before moving the pressure washer so that the pressure washer does not damage the ground surface. It is desirable, therefore, to provide an improved water pressure hose for use with a water pressure washer, which does not require a large water pressure to be used to generate a desirable spray. It is also desirable to provide an improved water pressure hose that can be rotated about an elongate axis so as to permit more effective cleaning of surfaces. It is further desirable to provide a water pressure hose that
