I'm trying to make something similar to the answer in this question: Concatenate floats in numpy. to work with strings. Currently, I'm converting from matrix_2d.T in my code, and saving this as a row in the string. Since the end value of each row is -inf, and no value is assigned to the columns, the strings are no longer valid after zeros are added. Is there a better method to convert the row into a string? Implementation: rows = [] for i in range(np.rows(matrix_2d.T)): rows.append(str(matrix_2d.T[i, :])) I thought about adding a "0" to the beginning and end of each row, like so: rows = [] for i in range(np.rows(matrix_2d.T)): rows.append('0' + str(matrix_2d.T[i, :])) But, this seems inefficient and non-generalizable. There should be a better, generic way to do this. Thanks! A: From the documentation of the array2string function: array2string
