All images are comprised of color and light, so what makes a one-of-a-kind image really stand out? Color, of course! The astounding colors in your images may already be perfect. That's because they were made with a powerful tool called Levels, an adjustment that makes your image appear corrected and looking great. It's like replacing the lights-out tool with the friendly guy in the neighborhood gas station. But sometimes an image really needs more, and in those instances, a Levels adjustment isn't going to have the desired effect. So you'll want to watch the Black & White panel, and when it brings up the Curves dialog box, you'll see that a "Clipper" tool has been added to the lower-left corner of the image. Once you select the tool and drag it over the desired area of the image, the area will light up and you'll see that it will "clip" or "cut out" the areas of the image that are dark according to the "Curves" equation. The freed up area of the image will now look more radiant with plenty of room for your own creativity to add either a touch of light and color or a transition effect. And anyone who has ever taken a photo—particularly of people—will tell you that the "Clipper" tool is quite the necessary tool for making images come to life. It helps you see what's been missing in an image. Levels adjustment is an important tool for correcting images. It is these kinds of adjustments that can take an image from "good" to "professional." But adjusting your Levels can be a subjective process. Sometimes it's better to judge images on their own merits.
