The method of plating a substrate, particularly a semiconductor wafer, with a thin film is widely used in production of semiconductor devices. As well known in the art, in the plating method, the substrate is held on a holder or a lower electrode provided in a plating solution (reaction liquid) chamber of a plating apparatus. The holder or the lower electrode is connected to an upper electrode disposed in the plating solution chamber for applying an electric field between the holder and the upper electrode. Under this electric field, the substrate is plated with a predetermined
